What is Covec race suit material?

Our Covec material is a new material we have been working on for the last 4 years. It's a version on material that is used in the Bullit Jeans, which is a global brand of motorcycle road jeans and jackets.

The latest material for 2019 is stronger than previous years, with a higher tensile top layer, the three layers are;

Top Layer - dye sublimation suitable, brightest possible print colours with no fading over time, even stronger for 2019

Middle Layer - Covec yarn, stronger than standard aramid fibres and has high yarn on yarn abrasion resistance so it doesn't weaken throughout its life when washing and in use.

Back Layer - This is a special heat protective backing, which helps avoid friction and heat burns from crashes and hot surfaces.

why have stretch panels?

Normally, the stretchier the material is, the weaker it becomes. Covec has mechanical stretch to make it the toughest possible. With less stretch in the Covec material, we thought of ways to make the back and knee areas have the best possible movement. We opted to introduce stretch panels to the knees, lower back and shoulders. These panels give two way stretch giving optimal movement in those areas. Also adding more stitching and detailing to suits to give it a premium look and feel.

For 2019 we have added some extra stretch panelling areas which are printed and look like standard panels, but have multi-way stretch resulting in better movement and fit. You will find these in the lower back, front body and under arm.
